It would be almost impossible to indicate these values on ordinary coordinate paper because of the enormous differences in permeabilities. By plotting on logarithmic paper it is also possible to get some idea graphically of the mathematical relation between porosity and permeability. C D Figure 2.--Apparatus used for permeability tests The mathematical relation between permeability and porosity can be expressed, according to the graph, by the general equation $y = kx^n$ where y represents the permeability in the whole numbers as plotted and x represents the porosity as whole numbers. The value of n can be found by determining the angle the straight line makes with the horizontal and looking up the numerical tangent. For the line given, the tangent is 7.2 which may be taken as the value of n . As values for y and x are already known,...
